DESCRIPTION

Walls:	Limestone	Roof:	Corrugated Iron
Condition:	Fair	Integrity:
Original fabric:
Modifications:

Located immediately west of the Greenough River on the south side of McCartney Road, the barn is of a simple vernacular style. The large rectangular structure is of rubble limestone construction with a gable corrugated iron roof and parapets to gable ends. A lean to roof has been added to the east elevation which previously included a cream brick kiln with chimney built to facilitate the use of the place for making pottery. The chimney, which is shown on the photograph, was removed during conservation works undertaken in 1998. The west elevation has an enclosed verandah clad with corrugated iron. There is evidence of stone extensions to the south and east.

HISTORY

Construction Date:	1858	Source:	Palassis
Architect:	Not available
Builder:	Not available

There is evidence that this barn was used by W.F. Waldeck in 1871. The first Greenough Agricultural Show was held in 1873 in this barn and was attended by Governor Weld. Since then the building has been used variously over the years for storage, shearing etc. It was reconstructed by the National Trust of Australia (WA) and was used as a pottery from 1978 until 1994.
