As a clinical psychologist with 20 years' experience and lawyer with expertise in criminal justice, I bring unique qualifications to address Geraldton's challenges. My work across youth justice, regional prisons, courts, and child development has given me deep insights into the factors driving crime and the evidence-based solutions that work.

My dual qualifications let me understand complex issues from multiple perspectives. In clinical practice, I've worked with hundreds of local families, understanding their struggles firsthand. Through legal work in courts and corrections, I've seen how the justice system fails our community when offenders face no real consequences.

My wife teaches at Walkaway Primary where our four children were educated. Two study nursing and medicine in Perth, one is overseas working on a cattle farm before studying agribusiness, one remains at home. This gives me personal stakes in Geraldton's future across education, health, agriculture, and youth opportunities.

My priorities are clear: Push for judicial reform through state advocacy and support practical measures like improved lighting and ranger patrols to address crime. Scrutinise every dollar of council spending, eliminate waste, keep rates down. Advance the jetty and prioritise road, footpath, and bike path maintenance. Streamline planning, reduce red tape, support local employment. Demand better health services and training programs meeting industry needs.

Having stood as Liberal candidate for Geraldton, I've listened to your concerns. Crime, costs, and lack of services dominate every conversation. Council needs members who won't just talk but act decisively.

I promise transparency, accountability, and strong advocacy. You'll find me accessible year-round, not just during elections. Geraldton deserves councillors who combine real expertise with local roots. I offer both, plus determination to fight for real change.
