I'm Minna Rankine, part of the next generation stepping up for Geraldton. At 26, I've already led major community projects, co-built a social enterprise employing local people, and worked with government and business to deliver outcomes across WA.

I believe community works best when we collaborate, listen, and turn ideas into action. I bring care, clarity, and a practical approach to decision-making.

I know council alone does not have all the answers, but it can create the conditions for people, businesses, and ideas to flourish. I believe in decisions that make it easier for locals to contribute, that support small businesses and creative enterprises, and that invest in spaces where people feel connected, safe, and proud.

Whether elected or not, I will continue working for a creative Geraldton, and I believe I can contribute most effectively as part of the council.
